FROM THE DIRECTOR OF BANDS

One of the most fulfilling parts of being a band director is having the chance to watch students develop over time into confident individuals, musicians, and leaders. Unlike other teachers, we see our band members for many years (8 years to be exact!). More often than not, we see students make incredible positive changes in confidence, social skills, organization, focus, and work ethic throughout their time in the band program. All of this is, of course, in addition to the band's primary role of developing musicians.

Band directors also have the great luxury of spending numerous hours with our students. Because of this, we are able to get to know their personalities and learning styles, as well as any challenges they face. On the flip side, we don't exactly have a typical classroom of 30 students. The challenge in the band room, of course, is having over 100 diverse individuals, many of whom joined band for different reasons. With all of this in mind, the band directors are constantly striving to get to know our students in order to assist them in maximizing their potential. This part of our job is very coach-like. To have successful bands, we must have successful individuals.

To maximize our effectiveness as educators, the directors will be working with band members to do some individual goal-setting this year. We will ask them to reflect upon what they want to achieve on their instrument and also what they want to achieve in non-musical ways. When students set their own goals, they are much more likely to work towards achieving them.

The process of "igniting" this drive in students is gradual, but can be sparked by experiences and opportunities that happen to present themselves. As parents, we ask that you continue to look for those extra opportunities which can help your son or daughter develop musically and non-musically. This can include regular individual practicing at home, taking private lessons, participating in honor bands, watching live performances of professional ensembles, etc. These are all things that the directors encourage regularly in order for your band member to achieve great things.

If there are any ways we can help your son or daughter maximize their potential in band, please be sure to talk the directors. We would love to hear from you.

FROM THE BAND BOOSTER PRESIDENT

I would like to welcome all of our new band members and their parents. It is exciting to see the marching band starting to practice for the 4th of July Parade and the upcoming band season. It will be a great year for all of our band students and directors.

Please note on your calendars Monday, August 7th. This will be the annual picnic and swim party at Valley View. We will have a band booster meeting after we eat. This will be a great time to ask questions and get answers, and to learn about and sign up for the various booster activities for the coming year. I am looking forward to seeing all of you there.

I hope everyone will attend the 4th of July Parade. This will be the first time to see the new marchers in action. Please join me in cheering on our 2017-2018 Band of Gold.

Beth Wing
Band Booster President
